Darling BETTY

WHENEVER Tony Howard saw Betty Reade, his heart did an acrobatic flip-flop! Sometimes it seemed to jiggle so violently, that Tony was sure Betty could see it!

But Betty never seemed to know that Tony had a special feeling about her. "After all," Tony brooded, "I just can't walk up to her after class and say, 'Betty, you're beautiful! Your eyes are the deepest blue in the world, your hair is like silk, your skin . . . ' Ah, what's the use?"

The truth of the matter was that this romance was all in Tony's mind, for he was far too shy to do anything about it. Betty would never learn about Tony's super-special affection!

Oddly enough, it was this very subject that Tony was thinking about one afternoon, as he browsed through the library bookshelves. A title caught his eye and he reached out for the book.

"'Famous Love Letters,'" Tony read. "That's for me . . . for practice, I mean!" Opening his notebook, Tony began to copy these magnificent declarations, written by great poets and artists to their loved ones. "Gosh!" he kept muttering. "Gosh!"

The very next day, all was forgotten, however, what with a stiff math exam that lasted two hours.

The exam was so tough, that by the time Tony was through, he staggered from the classroom, bleary-eyed.

Behind him, on his desk, forgotten, lay his notebook.

He was halfway down the street, when a thrilling voice called after him, "Tony! Tony Howard! Wait for me!"

It was Betty Reade, looking prettier than ever as she raced down the street, waving a familiar-looking notebook in her hand.

"You . . . you forgot this," she said, holding the notebook out.

"Oh, thanks, Betty. It's my notebook," Tony said lamely. That was another thing. He could never think of anything to say to Betty when he had the chance. "Thanks again." He started to turn away, when Betty put a hand gently on his shoulder.

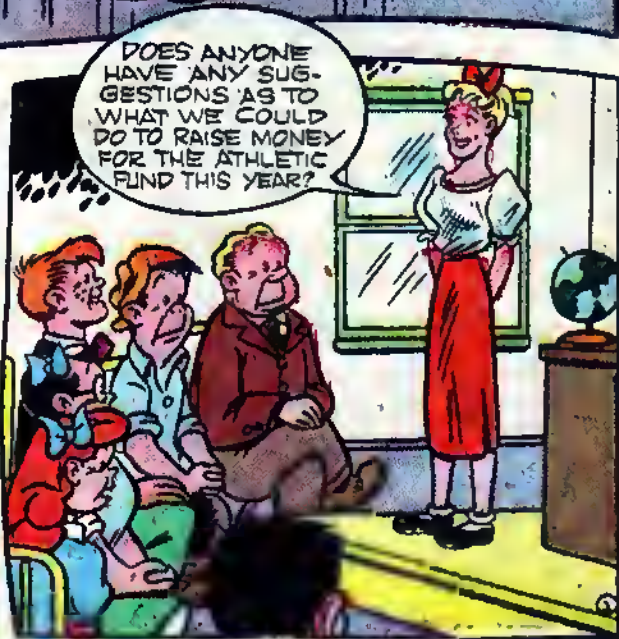

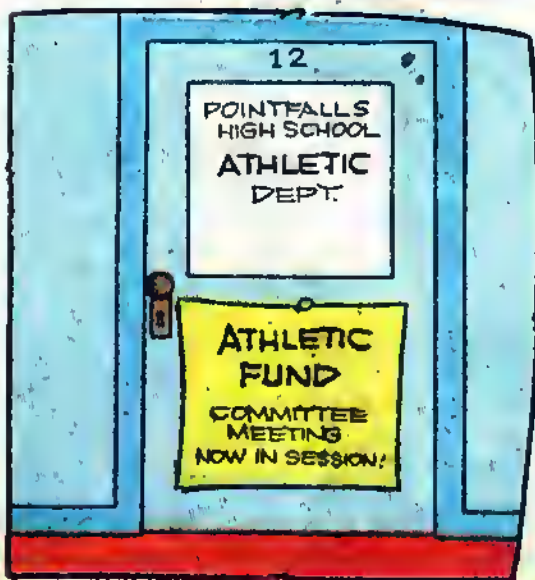

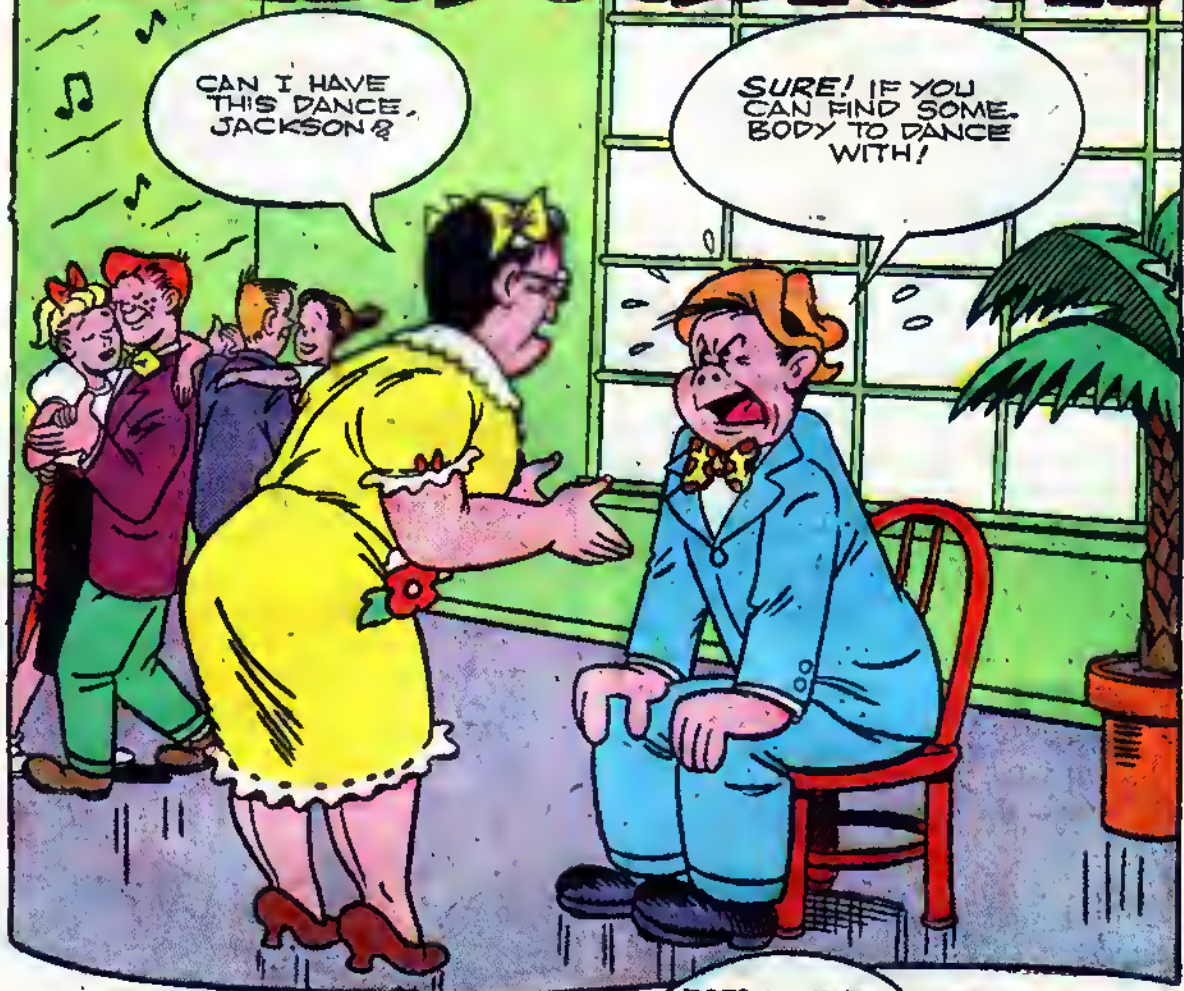

"Wait a minute, Tony," she said. A soft flush covered her cheeks. "Before you go, I want you to know that . . . that I kinda like you, too!"

All the way home, Tony trod on fleecy clouds. "How? What? How does she know it's romance! I made it! But how?"

It wasn't until much later, when Tony glanced into his notebook, that he found the answer. Every single one of the love letters he had copied began "Darling Betty!"

Something BORROWED, Something BLAH

THERE are two moments in every girl's life when she doesn't know whether to laugh or cry! One is when she's about to meet the most magnificent man in town! The other is when she just knows she hasn't a thing to wear!

Jinny was facing both these problems at the same time. Here she was, about to meet Clark Wayne, new man in town, and there was her clothes closet . . . full of rags!

"I want to look dramatic, stunning, mysterious!" Jinny told her mirrored reflection. "I want this to be a real case of boy-meets-girl! Now, what'll I wear?"

The answer, when it came, was overpowering. Big sister had a wardrobe, didn't she? Digging deep, Jinny came up with as dreamy a dress as she had ever seen. "Black satin with side slits!" she breathed. "How femme fatale! And look! Black satin pumps with spike heels! Never knew sis had it in her!"

In a quilted hatbox, a small black satin hat with veil and feathers and a wicked-looking tilt seemed to beckon to Jinny. And a rhinestone choker, with pendants, was the finishing touch!

"Am I ever glamorous!" Jinny exclaimed, as she viewed her top-toe image in the hall mirror.

All the way to the Soda Setup, Jinny noticed the glances that were directed at her. Her heart swelled with pride that only a beautiful, well-dressed woman feels. Drawing a deep breath, she flung open the door of the Soda Setup and paused on the threshold for the effect.

A hush fell over the gang as all heads turned her way. And then, horror of horrors, a burst of hilarious laughter filled the room! The gang roared like crazy!

Face burning, Jinny turned and fled. High heels or no, she raced for the safety of home as fast as she could. That look of disbelief on Clark Wayne's face! Would she ever forget it?

Eyes smarting, she got into her plaid skirt and angora sweater, her yellow bobby socks and saddle shoes. Sadly, she washed every trace of makeup from her face, wondering how she could ever again face people.

When the doorbell rang, Jinny answered it reluctantly and there . . . looking twice as nice when he was shy . . . stood Clark Wayne! "I . . . what . . . oh!" Jinny stammered, blushing red.

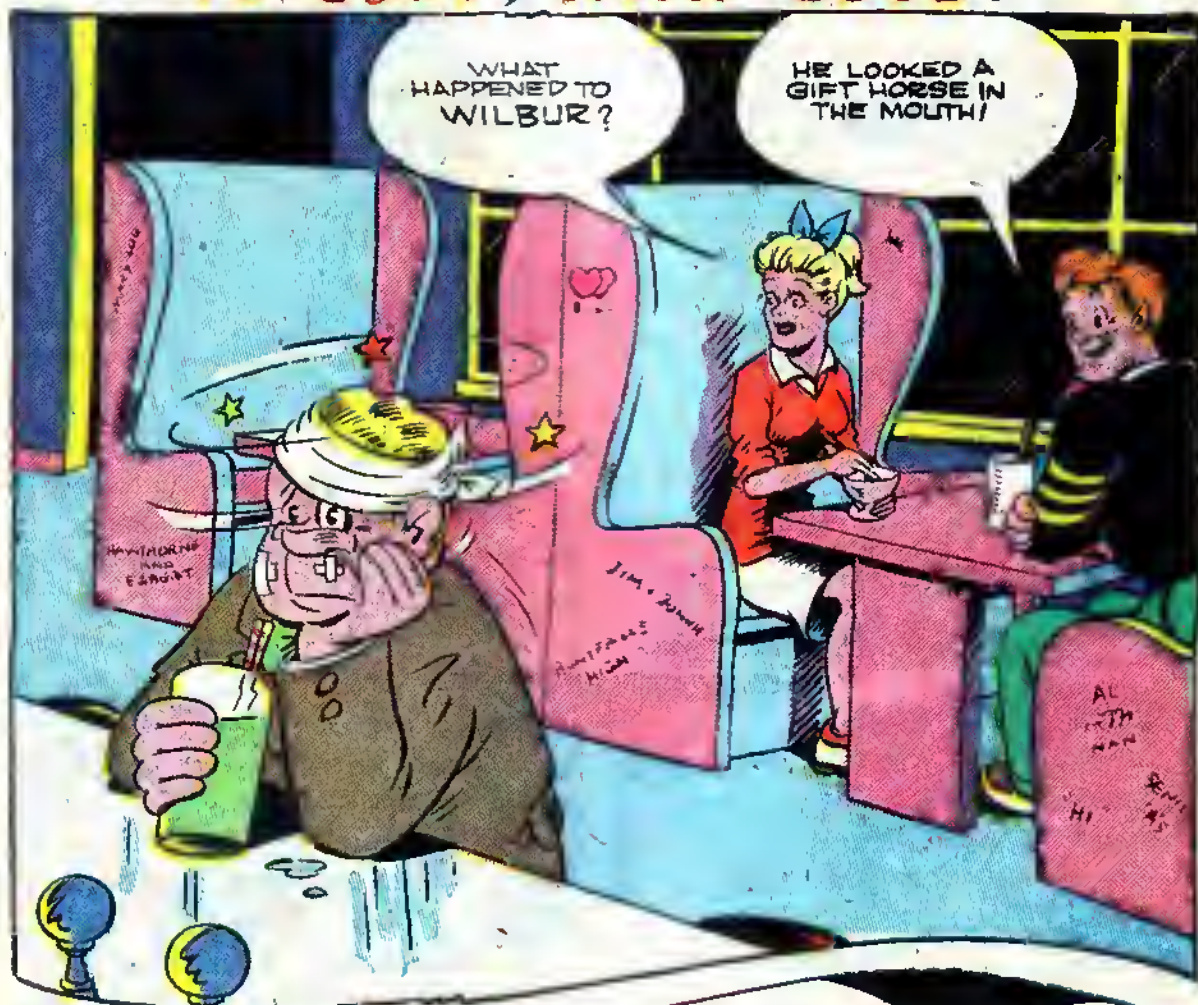

"I . . . I hope you don't mind," Clark said, shifting from one foot to the other "You see, I've never met a girl with a sense of humor like yours. That was the funniest gag I ever saw!"

Even after Jinny and Clark had become a well-known twosome, Jinny never told him that she hadn't been kidding!
